Buying a boat can be a complicated process. From the execution of contracts until a boat is handed over, many legal hurdles need to be mastered. Depending from where or to where the new ship is sailing, the ideal international sea route needs to be assessed, mooring needs to be organised and offseason maintenance needs to be taken into consideration too. Equally important are international insurance matters, registration or worldwide breakdown assistance. From giant container ships to sleek racing yachts, Captain Klaus Tietze has mastered them all over the decades and with more than one million sea miles under his keel (including a three year long family trip), he has more experience than most full-time cruise ship captains. But his expertise is not limited to navigation, as the father of six spent almost a decade as project manager at prestigious shipyards specialising in performance multihulls. The racing cats and the sophisticated schooners at the TALL SHIP RACES are the ones that make his heart beat a little faster. "Every journey starts with stepping on board. Our clients come from all different backgrounds, some wish to take a sabbatical, other plan to cruise the oceans of the world without limits," Tietze explains. And cat sale is unrivalled when it comes to good advice. "We help make the right choice, offer project management if someone decides to have his own boat built from scratch, we assist with accessories and travel planning and most important we are still here for our clients should they encounter unforeseen technical or other issues far away from their home port."

cat sale specialises in the best performance multihulls from Europe's most prestigious and renowned mid-sized shipyards, which differ strongly from the cheaply made mass fabricated models. Contrary to other boats multihulls are perfect for long-term cruising as they offer far more space and living comfort at anchor and at sea than standard boats. Passionate about cruising multihulls, Tietze and his skilled team know exactly what counts: "Quality, individuality and safety at sea are the key issues when it comes to picking the perfect multihull for a comfortable long-term cruising experience."
